ABSTRACT

Typological classification of projectile points found at prehistoric archaeological sites has long been recognized and employed by archaeologists as a reliable means of assessing site age and cultural affiliation. The purpose of this study was to classify projectile points in existing collections from prehistoric sites in North Carolina to provide more detailed cultural and chronological information about those sites. These collections are curated at the Research Laboratories of Anthropology at The University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. A similar study, conducted in 1989–1990 and subsequently designated Phase I, classified 22,244 projectile points and 105 other artifacts from 1,313 archaeological sites in North Carolina (Davis and Daniel 1990). The present study, conducted in 1995–1996, classified 25,508 additional projectile points from 1,725 North Carolina archaeological sites in 85 counties. Together, these studies have now classified 47,752 projectile points (and 105 other artifacts) from 2,822 sites in 86 of North Carolina's 100 counties. These represent approximately 76% of the projectile points from known sites (excluding those retrieved from major site-excavation projects and sites outside North Carolina) in the collections of the Research Laboratories of Anthropology.

INTRODUCTION

Typological classification of projectile points has long been used by archaeologists as an effective means of judging site age and cultural affiliation. Because the Research Laboratories of Anthropology (RLA) at The University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill curates the largest collection of points from North Carolina archaeological sites, an artifact classification project was initiated in 1989 with a Survey and Planning grant to provide typological data that would enhance the State's archaeological site files. This initial phase (designated Phase I) of the Projectile Point Classification Project was undertaken to provide more detailed cultural and chronological information about numerous prehistoric archaeological sites recorded during early archaeological surveys of North Carolina. Although the locations of these sites had been known for many years, the cultural components at these sites were largely unknown or poorly recognized. Phase I focused on artifacts collected before 1960 from sites in piedmont North Carolina and classified 22,245 projectile points and 105 other culturally diagnostic artifacts from 1,313 prehistoric archaeological sites (Davis and Daniel 1990).

While the primary purpose of this initial inventory was to upgrade the State's archaeological site files housed at the Office of State Archaeology, the data contained in this inventory also comprise an important source of information for future research and have allowed the Research Laboratories of Anthropology (RLA) to manage and utilize its collections more effectively. Given the positive results of this initial study, funds for a second phase of the project (designated Phase II) were requested to examine approximately 22,000 additional projectile points from an estimated 1,400 sites that remained unclassified in the RLA collections. These artifacts came from survey and donated collections from archaeological sites in the Mountains and Coastal Plain, as well as from collections from sites in the Piedmont obtained after about 1960.

This second phase of the project, reported here, was partially funded by a Survey and Planning grant from the United States Department of the Interior and administered by the Office of State Archaeology, North Carolina Division of Archives and History. These funds were matched by cash and in-kind support from the Research Laboratories of Anthropology, The University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill.

As with the initial study, artifact classification was conducted by I. Randolph Daniel, Jr., in consultation with R. P. Stephen Davis, Jr. Two student assistants, Sarah Hopton and Brian Overton, aided the study by retrieving artifacts from the RLA's curation facility on the UNC campus, conducting preliminary artifact sorting, and entering data into computer files.

BACKGROUND

Background research and preparation largely followed that undertaken during the Phase I study. The computer-coding format developed for Phase I was used to insure compatibility between the results of the two studies. This format permitted coding of the following attributes for each analyzed artifact: (1) state site number, (2) RLA catalog number, (3) tool type, (4) raw material type, and (5) type of modification (if any) (Table 1). During the Phase II study, it was necessary to add one additional tool type (Pigeon Side-Notched) and an additional raw material type (glass). The addition of the Pigeon Side-Notched projectile point type was necessary because of the inclusion of a larger number of sites from the Mountain region than in the initial study. The inclusion of a new raw material type was based upon the presence of a single small triangular point chipped from a piece of green bottle glass.

Comparative type collections developed in the first phase of the project were also utilized during this study. Most of the artifacts in these collections are illustrated specimens that accompanied the original type descriptions [largely defined by Coe (1964), Keel (1976), and Oliver (1981)] and are on file at the RLA.

The sample of projectile points examined in this study was selected as follows. First, a comprehensive list of all projectile points in the RLA collections was generated. This list then was reduced by eliminating: (1) all artifacts classified during Phase I, (2) all artifacts from sites without specific site provenience or from sites outside North Carolina, and (3) all artifacts from major site excavations where cultural and chronological affiliation were already known. This resulted in a sample of about 40,000 points from about 2,400 archaeological sites.

Finally, all of the artifacts in the sample were retrieved for study. Some of these were filed in wooden trays at the RLA (in Alumni Building) and thus were easy to retrieve; however, most had to be pulled from boxes in the RLA's storage facility (located in Wilson Library on the UNC campus). This time-consuming task was accomplished by student assistants under the guidance of the principal investigator.

The project began in August 1995. At that time, an inventory of artifacts to be studied was created and the comparative type collection was assembled. A student assistant then began to retrieve artifacts. Actual artifact classification began the following October and continued intermittently until April, 1996. Another student assistant began entering data into a computer file in March and completed this task in April, 1996. Computer-file translation, the tabulation of project results, and report preparation were accomplished between May and August, 1996.

Unlike the first phase of this project, point classification initially proceeded much slower than expected. The main reason for this delay was the time spent handling artifacts in bags instead of in open trays. Moreover, the slower classification pace was compounded by the fact that many bags contained only one or two specimens. To alleviate this problem, a student assistant was trained in December to help with initial artifact sorting and coding. This added effort greatly increased our efficiency and allowed us to exceed the project's target sample of 22,000 projectile points.

ARTIFACT ANALYSIS

As with Phase I, analysis of projectile points was limited to: (1) the identification of artifact provenience (i.e., State site number, RLA site number, and RLA catalog number); (2) the classification by projectile point type; (3) the determination of general raw material type; and (4) the recording of any subsequent modification (other than simple resharpening or breakage). These data were recorded on computer coding sheets as numeric codes and then were entered into a computer file. Once the computer file was compiled, the type codes were translated into type names. Specific aspects of analysis, including the definition of projectile point types, are summarized below.

Site Number

State site designations were recorded for each analyzed artifact. For convenience, RLA site designations are also provided. Because most of the artifacts examined are from sites recorded prior to 1980, their two site designations usually are the same (except that the state designation includes a "31" prefix which stands for North Carolina).

Catalog Number

The Research Laboratories of Anthropology (RLA) catalog number also was recorded for each artifact. This tripartite designation consists of an accession number (which identifies a specific site, survey, excavation, or donated collection), a specimen type (this designation was "a" [for artifact] for all analyzed specimens), and a specimen number (which identifies a specific provenience and category of artifacts within the accession designation). It provides a reference to more detailed provenience and descriptive data on file at the RLA.

Projectile Point Type Descriptions

Thirty-six previously defined types and six other general categories were used to classify projectile points during Phase I of the project, and these definitions are restated below in rough chronological order. The single addition to this list for the Phase II study was Pigeon Side-Notched, a type that occurs in the Mountains during the Early Woodland period.

Clovis (and Fluted). Suhm, Krieger, and Jelks (1954) describe the Clovis type as a medium to large, auriculate, fluted point with an incurvate base. Clovis projectile points are associated with the Paleo-Indian period (before 8,000 B.C.) in the Southeastern United States. Because of uncertainties regarding the proper stylistic classification of the fluted points (mostly fragments) encountered during the Phase II study, they were classified more generically as Fluted.

Hardaway Blade. Coe (1964:64) describes this type as having "a broad, thin blade with a concave and thinned base." Hardaway Blades were recovered from basal deposits at the Hardaway site and are thought to date about 10,000 B.C. (Coe 1964).

Hardaway-Dalton. Coe (1964:64) describes the Hardaway-Dalton projectile point type as having a "broad, thin blade with deeply concave bases and shallow side-notches. Bases and side-notches were ground and edges were frequently serrated." This projectile point type is associated with the late Paleo-Indian period in piedmont North Carolina (before 8,000 B.C.) (Coe 1964; Ward 1983).

Hardaway Side-Notched. Coe (1964:67) describes the Hardaway Side-Notched type as having "a small, broad, thin blade with narrow side-notches and a recurved, concave base." This type is regarded as a specialized variant of the Hardaway-Dalton type and was found in basal deposits at the Hardaway site.

Palmer Corner-Notched. Coe (1964:67) describes the Palmer Corner-Notched projectile point type as having "a small corner-notched blade with a straight, ground base and pronounced serrations." This type dates to the Early Archaic period (ca. 8000 B.C.), and represents a transitional form from the Hardaway Side-Notched type to the Kirk Corner-Notched type.

Kirk Corner-Notched. Coe (1964:69) describes the Kirk Corner-Notched projectile point type as having "a large triangular blade with a straight base, corner-notches, and serrated edges." This is a predominant type of the Early Archaic period (ca. 8,000–6,000 B.C.).

St. Albans Side-Notched. Broyles (1971:73) describes this type as a small triangular point with a side notched blade and a notched base. St. Albans Side-Notched projectile points have been recovered from stratified, Early Archaic contexts (ca. 6,900–6,500 B.C.) at the Rose Island, Icehouse Bottom, and Bacon Farm sites in southeast Tennessee (Chapman 1975, 1977, 1978), and at the St. Albans site in West Virginia (Broyles 1966, 1971).

LeCroy Bifurcated Stem. Kneberg (1956:28) describes this type as follows: "The basic shape is trianguloid with straight or incurvate side edges. The blade edges are usually serrated, often deeply so, resulting in a series of several sharp barbs from the tip to the shoulders. The stem varies from straight to slightly flared, and is usually deeply bifurcated. The edges of the stem are finely chipped, and occasionally finished by being ground smooth. The majority are small, and have broad proportions. Even the medium-sized examples are relatively broad." LeCroy Bifurcated Stem points have been found in stratified, late Early Archaic contexts (ca. 6,500–5,800 B.C.) at the Rose Island, Icehouse Bottom, Patrick, Bacon Farm, and Calloway Island sites in southeast Tennessee (Chapman 1975, 1977, 1978, 1979) and at the St. Albans site in West Virginia (Broyles 1966, 1971).

Kanawha Stemmed. Broyles (1971:59) describes this type as having a "small triangular blade with a short rounded and shallow notched base." Points of this type have been recovered in stratified context at the Rose Island, Icehouse Bottom, Patrick, and Bacon Farm sites in southeast Tennessee (Chapman 1975, 1977, 1978) and at the St. Albans site in West Virginia (Broyles (1966, 1971), where they have been radiocarbon-dated to 6,100–5,800 B.C.

Kirk Serrated. Coe (1964:70) describes this projectile point type as having "a long narrow blade with deep serrations and a broad square stem." The base usually is straight and blunt but may be thinned and concave. Kirk Serrated is regarded as a late Early Archaic (ca. 6,000 B.C.) type.

Kirk Stemmed. Coe (1964:70) describes this projectile point type as having "a long daggerlike blade with deep serrations and a broad stem." The base typically is straight or slightly rounded. This type is similar with the Kirk Serrated type and probably dates to the late Early Archaic period (ca. 6,000 B.C.).

Stanly Stemmed. This projectile point type is characterized by a broad, triangular blade and a small, squared stem with an indented base (Coe 1964:35). Stanly projectile points date to the early Middle Archaic period (ca. 6,000–5,500 B.C.) and have been recovered in stratified contexts at the Icehouse Bottom, Howard, and Calloway Island sites in southeast Tennessee (Chapman 1977, 1979), and at the Doerschuk site in piedmont North Carolina.

Morrow Mountain I Stemmed. Coe (1964:37) describes this projectile point type as having "a small triangular blade with a short pointed base." The blade usually is broad relative to the length. Points of this type have been recovered in stratified, Middle Archaic (ca. 5,500–5,000 B.C.) contexts at the Doerschuk site in piedmont North Carolina (Coe 1964), and at the Icehouse Bottom and Howard sites in southeast Tennessee (Chapman 1977, 1979).

Morrow Mountain II Stemmed. The Morrow Mountain II projectile point type is defined by a long, narrow blade and a tapered stem (Coe 1964:37). This projectile point type is associated with the Middle Archaic period (ca. 5,500–5,000 B.C.) and has been recovered in stratified context at the Doerschuk site in piedmont North Carolina (Coe 1964), and at the Icehouse Bottom and Howard sites in southeast Tennessee (Chapman 1977, 1979).

Guilford Lanceolate. The Guilford Lanceolate projectile point type is defined by "a long, slender, but thick blade with straight, rounded, or concave base" (Coe 1964:43). Coe (1964:44, 118), based upon excavations at the Doerschuk and Gaston sites in North Carolina, has suggested that the Guilford Lanceolate type dates from about 5,000–4,000 B.C. (i.e., Middle Archaic period).

Halifax Side-Notched. The Halifax Side-Notched type is described by Coe (1964:108) as having a "slender blade with slightly restricted base. Shallow side-notches. Base and side-notches were usually ground. The material most frequently used was vein quartz." The stratigraphic position of Halifax materials between Guilford and Late Archaic Savannah River strata at the Gaston site indicate a late Middle Archaic temporal association (Coe 1964:118).

Savannah River Stemmed. Coe (1964:44) describes this projectile point type as having "a large, heavy, triangular blade with a broad stem." Savannah River Stemmed projectile points were recovered in stratified context at the Doerschuk site (Coe 1964) and have been radiocarbon dated to ca. 3,000–1,800 B.C. at the Bacon Bend site in southeast Tennessee (Chapman 1981).

Small Savannah River Stemmed. This projectile point type is described by Oliver (1981:181) as "a small to medium sized, broad, triangular bladed point with a rectangular stem and a straight or slightly excurvate base. It is regarded as a late variant of the Savannah River Stemmed type.

Gypsy Stemmed. Oliver (1981:188) describes this type as "a small, triangular bladed point with a square or rectangular straight stem, and a straight, slightly incurvate base, or excurvate base." It has been recovered from stratified, Early Woodland (ca. 1,000 B.C.–A.D. 1) contexts at the Warren Wilson, Doerschuk, Gaston, and Thelma sites (see Oliver 1981:189).

Badin Crude Triangular. Coe (1964:45) describes this type as "a large, crudely made triangular point" that was made solely by direct percussion. An Early Woodland context is assumed.

Swannanoa Stemmed. Keel (1976:196) describes this projectile point type as "a small, thick, triangular-bladed point with a relatively long stem. This type was associated with the Early Woodland Swannanoa component (ca. 500 B.C. – A.D. 1 ?) at the Warren Wilson site.

Pigeon Side-Notched. Keel (1976:127) describes this projectile point type as a "medium-sized triangular-bladed, shallow side notched point." This point type is almost always made of chert and is associated with the Early Woodland period in western North Carolina.

Transylvania Triangular. This type is "a large, thick, straight-bladed point with an incurvate or straight base" (Keel 1976:130). An Early to Middle Woodland cultural association is suggested for this western North Carolina point type.

Garden Creek Triangular. Keel (1976:130) defined this type as "a long, narrow, concave-based isosceles triangle usually made of quartzite," and considered it to be associated with the late Pigeon and early Connestee phases of the Middle Woodland period in western North Carolina.

Copena Triangular. This type is defined as "a medium to large, trianguloid point. The sides of the hafting area are usually parallel" (Cambron and Hulse 1964:26). Projectile points of this type were recovered from the pre-mound humus and primary mound fill at Garden Creek Mound No. 2 and are attributed to the Middle Woodland Connestee phase in western North Carolina. No Copena Triangular projectile points were identified in the Phase I or Phase II study collections.

Connestee Triangular. Keel (1976:131) defines this type as "a medium-sized isosceles triangle usually made of chert." Connestee Triangular points usually have straight to incurvate lateral edges and a straight to slightly excurvate base. This type is associated with the Middle Woodland Connestee phase in western North Carolina.

Haywood Triangular. This projectile point type is defined as "a small, equilateral, triangular point with a straight or incurved base," and is thought to be associated with the late Connestee phase (Keel 1976:132–133).

Yadkin Large Triangular. This type is described by Coe (1964:45) as "a large, symmetrical, and well-made triangular point," that usually has a concave base. This projectile point type is associated with the Early-Middle Woodland Yadkin phase in piedmont North Carolina.

Roanoke Large Triangular. Coe (1964:110) describes this type as a "large, well-made, triangular point with slightly concave base and sides. Usually made from argillite, but also from vein quartz and quartzite." This is a Middle to early Late Woodland type originally identified at the Gaston site on the Roanoke River, and appears to be equivalent to the Uwharrie and Caraway types of the central North Carolina Piedmont.

Uwharrie Triangular. This type is a thin, well-made, medium-sized, triangular point that has been finely retouched and has a straight to slightly incurvate base. It is intermediate in size and form to the earlier Yadkin Large Triangular and later Caraway Triangular types, and is associated with the early Late Woodland period in piedmont North Carolina.

Pee Dee Pentagonal. This projectile point type is described by Coe (1964:49) as "a small asymmetrical and carelessly made point. . . . Pentagonal in form, usually asymmetrical. Some specimens, however, were very carefully and symmetrically made." Although this type is associated largely with the late prehistoric Pee Dee phase in the southern North Carolina Piedmont, Pee Dee Pentagonal points also occur infrequently on late prehistoric and historic sites elsewhere in the Piedmont.

South Appalachian Pentagonal. Keel (1976:133) defines this type as "a small pentagonal point with a straight base made of chert," and suggests that it may have a Connestee phase association in western North Carolina. The presence of similar points on Late Woodland and Early Mississippian sites in nearby southeast Tennessee suggest a somewhat broader cultural and temporal association (see Kimball 1985:60).

Pisgah Triangular. This type is a small isosceles or equilateral triangle that has a flat or slightly concave base (Dickens 1976:135; Keel 1976:199), and was the predominant projectile point associated with the late prehistoric Pisgah component at the Warren Wilson site.

Madison. This type is a small, thin, triangular projectile point with straight lateral edges and a straight or slightly concave base (Scully 1951; Keel 1976:53–54). This projectile point type has a general South Appalachian Mississippian cultural association in western North Carolina.

Caraway Triangular. This type is a small, straight-sided, isosceles-triangular point with a straight or slightly incurvate base (Coe 1964:49). Projectile points of this type vary considerably in quality of workmanship, and are associated with the Late Woodland and early Historic period cultures of the North Carolina Piedmont.

Clarksville Small Triangular. Coe (1964:112) describes this projectile point type as a "very small triangular point, equilateral in shape and almost always made from vein quartz." Although Coe considers this type to be associated with the historic period in the Clarksville area, it probably is associated with the late prehistoric period as well.

Randolph Stemmed. According to Coe (1964:50), projectile points of this type "looked like crude miniature versions of the old Morrow Mountain II type. They had a roughly tapered stem, and they were narrow and thick. The chipping was exceedingly rough and crude, and most of the flakes were irregular and poorly controlled. In many instances this produced a saw-toothed edge. The most interesting characteristic about these points, however, is that they almost always show that they had been made from old flakes or broken points of an earlier period." Although this type is attributed to "destitute bands" of the eighteenth century, they are rare to absent at virtually all Piedmont sites that have produced historic trade artifacts. Because of this, their exact temporal association is considered uncertain.

Projectile Point (Notched). This category identifies whole projectile points that are notched but cannot be attributed to a specific type. They probably date to the Archaic period.

Projectile Point (Stemmed). This category identifies whole projectile points that are stemmed but cannot be attributed to a specific type. Most of these probably date to the Archaic or Early Woodland periods.

Projectile Point (Triangular). This category identifies whole projectile points that are triangular in form but cannot be attributed to a specific type. They probably date to the Middle Woodland, Late Woodland, or Historic periods.

Projectile Point Fragment (Notched/Stemmed). This category identifies notched or stemmed projectile point fragments that cannot be attributed to a specific type. They probably date to the Archaic period.

Projectile Point Fragment (Triangular). This category identifies triangular projectile point fragments that cannot be attributed to a specific type. They probably date to the Middle Woodland, Late Woodland, or Historic periods.

Projectile Point Fragment (Indeterminate). This category identifies projectile point fragments (mostly distal ends) that cannot be attributed to a specific type.

Raw Material Types

All analyzed artifacts were classified into one of 10 raw material categories. Classification was based upon macroscopic characteristics of mineralogy, color, textural character, and grain size. The metavolcanic category includes both aphyric and porphyritic rhyolitic flows and tuffs. Argillite is also included in this category, although it is more correctly classed as a metasedimentary stone. The sources of these stone types are found in the Piedmont, some of which can be traced to specific quarries in the Uwharrie Mountains (Daniel and Butler 1994).

Quartz, quartz crystal, and quartzite occur throughout the state and occur with some frequency in the collection. A small number of jasper and chalcedony projectile points were present in the collection, but the source(s) of these raw materials is unknown. A few chert projectile points also were identified, and these appear to represent at least two major chert types: Ridge and Valley cherts from east Tennessee and possibly southwest Virginia, and Allendale chert from the lower Savannah River valley. Two other categories—patinated (indeterminate) and indeterminate—were used to classify specimens that either were too weathered to determine raw material type or were simply unidentifiable. Finally, a new raw material category—glass—was added to the list of raw material types in order to classify a single triangular projectile point from a contact-period site that was chipped from a piece of European bottle glass.

Modification Types

Modifications made to a projectile point, though rare, also were recorded when observed, and included: (1) reworking into a drill, and (2) reworking into an end scraper.

RESULTS

As with the initial study (Phase I), the purpose of the Projectile Point Classification Project was to provide detailed cultural and chronological information on prehistoric archaeological sites in North Carolina through the typological classification of diagnostic lithic artifacts. Toward this end, descriptive data were generated for 25,508 projectile points from 1,725 archaeological sites in 85 North Carolina counties (Table 2). All time periods from Paleo-Indian to European contact are represented (Table 3). These results exceeded the target sample of 22,000 projectile points from an anticipated 1,400 sites.

The Phase I study focused on collections from sites in Piedmont North Carolina that were accessioned and cataloged by the RLA prior to the mid-1960s, were the focus of the study and were systematically examined. Other collections from sites in the Mountains and Coastal Plain were classified as time permitted and in a less-than-systematic manner. During the present study, all remaining collections obtained by the RLA prior to the mid-1960s were studied, as well as most collections obtained through survey or by donation before about 1980. Additionally, some more recent survey collections (i.e., those that were easily accessible) also were studied.

The product of the Projectile Point Classification Project, transmitted earlier to the North Carolina Office of State Archaeology, consists of a database (contained on two high-density 3.5-inch diskettes and printed as Appendix 1) that contains all the information that resulted from the project. Specifically, the database contains 8,889 records pertaining to the 25,508 classified projectile points. The two computer files are in dBase format (*.dbf) and contain the following fields: State site number, RLA site number, RLA catalog number, quantity, tool type, raw material type, modification type, cultural period [this was derived from the tool type (see Table 3)], and county location (this was derived from the county abbreviation in the state site number).

These data, when combined with the results of the Phase I study, now provide culture-chronological information for a majority of the North Carolina archaeological sites represented in the site survey files of the Research Laboratories of Anthropology. Accordingly, this information should greatly facilitate both the management of these important resources by the Office of State Archaeology and future research into regional settlement patterns and raw material utilization.

CONCLUSIONS AND RECOMMENDATIONS

Phase II of the Projectile Point Classification Project was undertaken to expand the database of detailed cultural and chronological information that resulted from the Phase I study. The purpose of both studies was to enhance North Carolina's archaeological site inventory, maintained by the Office of State Archaeology. Although there was no specific research problem to be addressed by either study, it is believed that their results will contribute significantly to future archaeological studies that rely upon existing site survey records.

It is estimated that less than 15,000 projectile points from an unknown number of North Carolina archaeological sites remain unclassified within the collections of the Research Laboratories of Anthropology (excluding the thousands of points in the collections that lack specific site provenience). Because the senior author is no longer employed by The University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, there are no immediate plans to classify these remaining artifacts. However, it would be useful to complete this project at some future date given the availability of an experienced lithic analyst.
